CDN MAVERICK ANNOUNCES EXECUTIVE LEADERSHIP CHANGE

Vancouver, British Columbia – January 19, 2024 – CDN Maverick Capital Corp. (“CDN Maverick” or the “Company”) (CSE: CDN; OTCQB: AXVEF; Frankfurt: A117RU) announces a strategic shift in its executive leadership. Adam Cegielski has been terminated as CEO, effective immediately, and Simon D. Studer, currently serving as President, COO, and Director of CDN Maverick, has been appointed as Interim CEO.

This leadership transition responds to concurrent corporate and market transformations. In particular, a phase of historically lower trading volumes in the natural resource sector, concurrent with adjustments in lithium and other critical minerals and metals markets and prices globally.

Simon Studer remarks, “Our primary objective remains steadfast: to not just acquire any asset, but to strategically pursue those with distinct potential to add sustainable value to our company, even in adverse market conditions. The current market environment presents unique opportunities for strategic acquisitions and diversifying our approaches within CDN Maverick’s generative and investment businesses. Under my leadership, CDN Maverick will navigate these complexities with a long-term perspective and remains committed to its strategy of being commodity-agnostic and asset-independent, seeking synergies that create enduring value for our shareholders. At this point, we thank Adam for his service as CEO and wish him the best in his future endeavors.”
