Nov. 29, 2016 –$0.66

CALGARY, Nov. 29, 2016 /CNW/ - Maple Leaf Green World (MGW-V) ("Maple Leaf" or the "Company") announces that Mr. Matt Berger also known as Bubba Kush has joined Maple Leaf as the Chief Grower for its Nevada marijuana project. Bubba will be personally overseeing the cultivation process at our Nevada site, and he will also be growing some of his most prized genetics for the Company. Maple Leaf is delighted to enter into this partnership, as Bubba Kush is a formidable figure in the cannabis industry and he has plans to bring his most prized genetic cannabis strains to California and Canada for the Company.

Bubba Kush is a widely recognized figure and significant contributor to the cannabis industry. He has been cultivating cannabis for 25 years, developing genetics, gathering awards, and starting various cannabis-related businesses along the way. He has co-founded The Cannaseur Dispensaries in Colorado and has built out, managed and operated several cannabis cultivation facilities. He is credited with discovering (and naming) the Kush in 1992, which later became known as OG Kush, the strain that High Times Magazine named the "#1 Cannabis Strain of All Time". Matt is also credited with creating the Purple Kush and Bubba Kush strains from the Kush and from his original cut of the "Bubba". The history of Mr. Matt Berger can also be found on You Tube under the heading "History of Bubba Kush".

Furthermore, the Company has selected a warehouse property in Henderson, Nevada (within a 15 minute drive from Las Vegas) and is in the process of securing this property. Once the warehouse property is secured by Maple Leaf, the cultivation permit owned by BioNeva (see news release dated November 8, 2016) can be transferred to the Company and the Company's operations in Nevada can be commenced.
