

Caza Gold Finds New High-Sulfidation Epithermal Gold Target on the La Borbona Property in Nicaragua

Vancouver, Canada – April 10, 2012 –Greg Myers, CEO and President of Caza Gold Corp. (CZY: TSX-V, FSE: CZ6, and OTC Pink Sheets: CZGDF), announces that the Company's ongoing Nicaragua Regional Exploration Program has identified a new high sulfidation epithermal gold target named Las Lajas on its 100% owned La Borbona Property in Nicaragua.

La Borbona is located approximately 15 kilometers (km) southwest of Caza's key Los Andes Property where the Phase 1 exploration drill program is scheduled to commence shortly. Gold mineralization and alteration at Las Lajas has been identified in initial surface rock chip and soil samples from an area of strong silicification and advanced argillic to argillic alteration approximately 1.6 km in diameter inside a 7 km diameter volcanic caldera.

A total of approximately 160 soil samples collected on a 50-100 m spaced grid returned anomalous values ranging up to 40 ppb gold accompanied by strongly anomalous tellurium, bismuth, and selenium. The geochemically anomalous zone is hosted by strongly altered volcanic rocks and breccia bodies and is interpreted to sit high up in the hydrothermal system. Such high level targets are often considered to be the uppermost expressions of prospective high sulfidation epithermal gold deposits.

Work is continuing to explore the 25 km long Los Andes-Pochote gold bearing structure. The Company has identified more than 14 gold target areas based on rock chip sampling along the structure.

Preparations for drilling on the Los Andes Property are nearing completion at the Quisaltepe and Pedregal targets. Swiss boring SA de CV has been contracted for the Phase 1 Los Andes drilling program and permitting, road and pad building are well advanced for equipment mobilization within the next two weeks.

The Company is also delighted to announce that Mr. Bruce Korhonen has joined Caza Gold Corp. as the Director of Investor Relations, effective immediately.
