PlantX is working with Too Good To Go to create a channel for food products that are close to expiry which will reduce food waste, feed people and help the environment. PlantX has integrated Too Good To Go into XMarket stores in Chicago, Toronto and Ottawa with more locations to be announced.

"The plant-based lifestyle is about sustainability and working with the planet, reducing carbon emissions and eliminating waste," said PlantX CEO, Lorne Rapkin. "Our growing relationship with Too Good To Go is a key part of this important initiative. Expiration dates are not the end of the useful life of a product. While we may be required to remove certain products from our retail shelves after an expiration date, many of these products are still useful and this relationship helps us deliver healthy, plant-based food to consumers affordably."
