About BEE

BEE has developed and owns a patent-pending bee vectoring technology (consisting of a proprietary tray dispenser containing a unique carrier agent) that is designed to utilize bees as natural delivery mechanisms for a variety of powdered mixtures comprised of organic compounds that inhibit or eliminate common crop diseases, while at the same time fertilizing the same crops without the use of water. This unique and proprietary process facilitates a targeted delivery of crop controls to flowering crops and ornamentals using the simple process of bee pollination to replace traditional crop spraying, resulting in reduced cost, better yield, organic product and less impact on the environment without the use of water or disruptions to labour. Mike Collinson, CEO of BEE, stated that “BEE has the ability to deliver, every day throughout the bloom period, in microscopic amounts to each and every targeted flower, a wide variety of the most currently used inoculums, biologicals and stimulants in order to enhance crop yields and control pathogens. This unique application process is globally relevant, requires no water or significant financial capitalization, resulting in reduced costs of both labor and materials, thereby allowing small farmers or large growers to benefit from a natural process having positive results and less environmental impact than the spraying of chemicals.”

BEE is considered a development stage company and does not currently have revenue from operations. BEE had total assets of $409,303 and total liabilities of $983,062 for the three-month period ended December 31, 2014. All of the foregoing figures are unaudited and remain subject to further adjustments.
