About Clip

Clip is a technology company that lets radio listeners interact with anything they hear on the radio through an app on their phone. In the U.S., 245 million people listen to radio each week (BIA/Kelsey, a leading research and advisory company focused on local advertising and marketing) because they are interested in the content that is playing. Clip's technology builds a digital version of everything a listener hears on the radio and displays it on their phone in a feed format. When a user clicks on any item in the feed it opens into a full page representation of the content and lets a user take actions like buying tickets, entering a contest, viewing videos, securing an advertised discount or requesting more information. Every time a user engages with content in the feed, their actions generate data and direct leads specific to each radio station. Clip delivers this information to the advertiser which in turn increases the value advertisers receive from buying radio and their willingness to pay more to make their ads work on Clip's platform. This new revenue stream for radio stations is expected to continue to motivate radio stations to use their existing local sales infrastructure to sell Clip's technology as an upgrade to the standard radio ad buy and to use their promotional capability to drive users to apps supported by Clip. Leveraging the sales infrastructure and promotional capabilities of radio stations are key drivers for Clip's growth and increased profit margins.
