I foresee an abundance of exciting opportunities on the horizon for everyone associated with the Company, from management and shareholders to stakeholders and the communities of Baie Verte, Newfoundland and Labrador, and Cameron Lake, Ontario. The Baie Verte Peninsula is of particular importance, being known as 'the heart of mining in Newfoundland,'"* Mr. Kingsley explained.

Further expanding, he stated, "I have been frequenting the province of Newfoundland and Labrador since 2014, and I have grown a deep admiration for its significant geological resource potential and its residents. There have been notable developments on the island, and I firmly believe it falls upon companies like us, who are focused on these regions, to unearth this potential. Gold Hunter's ongoing projects have already seen a significant amount of groundwork, including over 200,000 metres of drilling, with historical drilling intercepts of high-grade gold, copper, and zinc, more than 1,200 surface samples taken, as well as the presence of historical production pits onsite.

The project enjoys year-round road accessibility, deep-sea port access, and is adjacent to the recently-operating Ming Mine, which is currently in receivership. It is also conveniently located near Maritime Resources Corp.'s Hammerdown project and its recently acquired Point Rousse Project, which includes the fully permitted Pine Cove mill, as well as Signal Gold Inc.'s Tilt Cove Project, hosting the previously operational, high-grade Nugget Pond Mine. Our engaged technical team is diligently working on the first-ever district data compilation, and we foresee having not only first-rate drill targets but also 3D geological models and regional targets across the Baie Verte Peninsula. We plan to share much of this information through forthcoming press releases, website updates, corporate presentation releases, and additional announcements.”

To facilitate Mr. Kingsley’s appointment, Mr. Richard Macey has stepped down as CEO and President. However, Mr. Macey will continue to provide his guidance and expertise as a Director of the Company.
